Do dormitories use a lot of energy?

As all dormitories do not have central heating facilities or central air-conditioning systems, electricity consumption can involve almost all the building energy consumption, including the energy consumed by air-conditioners, lighting, computers, and other daily energy consumers.

Do dormitory blocks save energy?

The research analyzed 55 dormitory blocks and found that the potential for energy savings at the block level was substantial. The difference in cooling EUI varied by up to 35.58% among different blocks, while the difference in heating EUI was even greater, up to 192.4%.

Can horizontally inclined PV modules be integrated into solar shading devices?

Mendis et al. (2020) proposed a method using horizontally inclined PV modules integrated into solar shading devices to address the issue of disadvantageous inclination and solar heat gains in commercial office buildings in the tropical context of Colombo, Sri Lanka.

Do dormitory blocks have inadequate rooftop shielding?

The similarity of building heights among dormitory blocks resulted in inadequate rooftop shielding. Conversely, different block types and arrangements led to distinct facade shielding levels and significant SEGI variations. Fig. 8. The total SEGI of 55 blocks.
